3. Read the following passage and answer the questions given below. (5)

Ants seem to be able to do everything but think, when an individual ant is subjected to any kind of intelligence test it generally comes out of it rather badly. An ant has very little individuality and is not beset by any anti-social urges or desires as men and women so often are; there are no counterparts of polio in an ants nest because there would be nothing for them to do. Any food an ant finds is shared, and it will unhesitatingly sacrifice its life if the nest is threatened. All the work it does is done for the community. The amazing industry and selflessness of an ant has excited the admiration of man since the time of Solomon.

- (a) What is than an ant cannot do?
- (b) How are ants different from human beings?
